This groundbreaking collection, edited by Donna Miscolta and Kelliher Kimmel, gathers an extraordinary assembly of voices from the underrepresented intersection of Black and Native American experiences. Their words interweave, creating a rich tapestry that challenges preconceptions, celebrates cultural legacies, and unearths hidden histories waiting to be told.

Unveiling a Mosaic of Lived Experiences

Black Indian Made in Michigan defies easy categorization. It is a sanctuary for stories that have long been marginalized, offering a platform to writers who have often found themselves on the periphery of mainstream literary conversations.

Within its pages, readers encounter a chorus of unique perspectives. Here are a few glimpses:

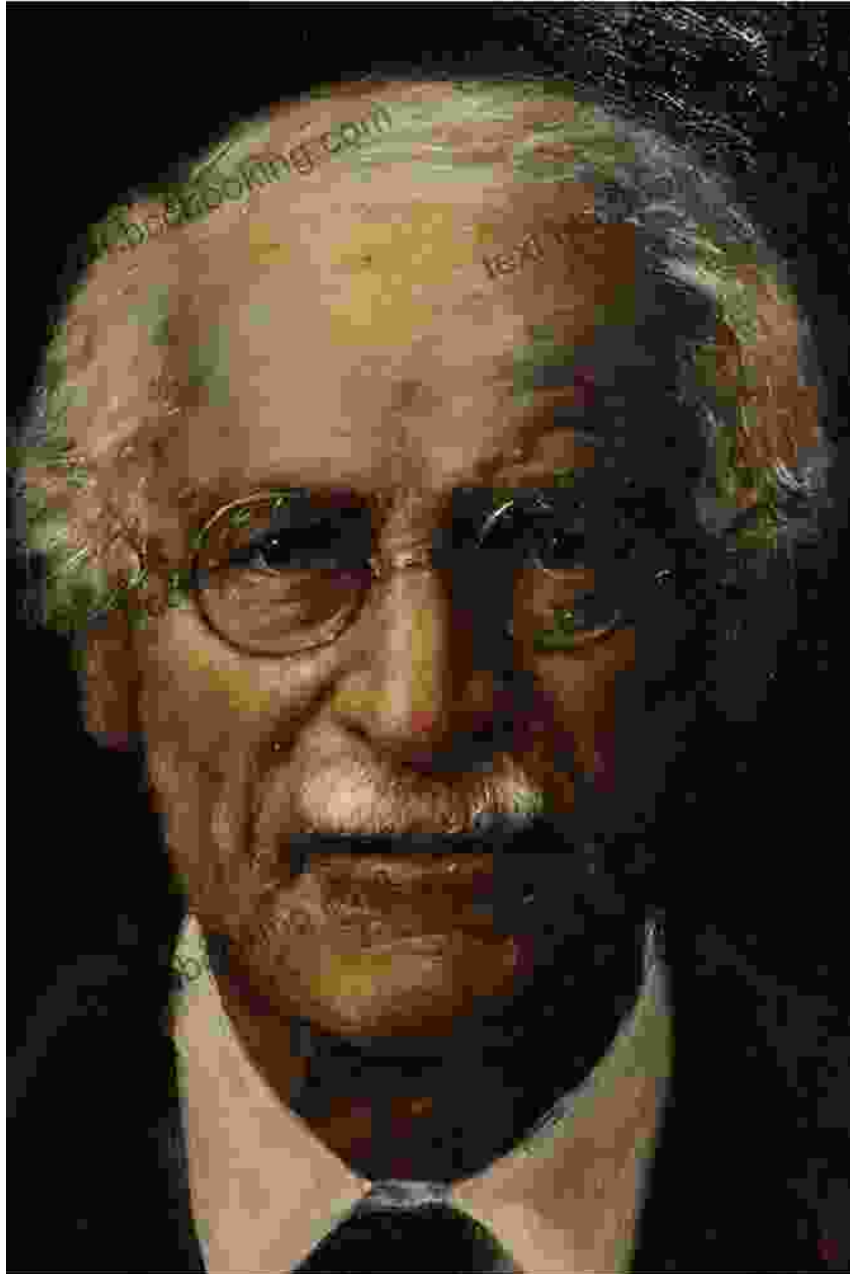

Colleen Sekaquaptewa, a Hopi-Dine writer and educator, delves into the intricate relationship between her Native American heritage and her life in urban Michigan. Her poems resonate with insights and a longing for connection.

Christina Denise Dalton

Christina Denise Dalton, an interdisciplinary artist and activist, explores the intersections of race, gender, and sexuality through her powerful essays and performances. Her words challenge dominant narratives and ignite conversations about social justice.

Carl Safford, a writer, producer, and community leader, shares his journey of identity exploration and self-discovery. His work celebrates the resilience and creativity of Black and Indigenous peoples.

Bridging Cultures, Fostering Understanding

The Black Indian Made in Michigan anthology transcends mere representation. It fosters a deeper understanding of the complexities of racial and cultural identity in America.

By weaving together these diverse voices, the collection reveals the rich history and ongoing legacy of intertribal relationships between Black and Native American communities. It unveils the shared experiences of colonialism, oppression, and resistance, as well as the enduring bonds of kinship and mutual support.

A Catalyst for Literary and Cultural Dialogue

More than just a collection of writings, Black Indian Made in Michigan is a catalyst for literary and cultural dialogue. It invites readers to challenge their assumptions, embrace intersectionality, and amplify the voices that have been silenced for far too long.

This groundbreaking anthology contributes to a growing body of literature that is redefining the American story. It serves as a testament to the power of storytelling, its ability to heal wounds, bridge divides, and foster a more just and equitable society.

A Call to Action

The voices of Black Indian Made in Michigan demand our attention. They demand recognition, respect, and an unwavering commitment to social change. This anthology is more than a literary creation; it is a call to action.

Let us celebrate the diversity of our American heritage by supporting the work of Black and Native American writers. Let us amplify their voices and continue the fight for a world where all stories can be heard and valued.

Together, we can create a future where the intersectionality of human experience is not just acknowledged but celebrated. A future where the Black Indian Made in Michigan legacy inspires generations to come.
