In Brutally Honest, The Sunday Times' most shocking and unforgettable interviews are collected in one volume for the first time. From politicians to celebrities to criminals, these interviews offer a glimpse into the minds of some of the most fascinating and controversial figures of our time.

The book opens with an interview with former Prime Minister Tony Blair, in which he discusses his decision to go to war in Iraq. Blair is unflinching in his defense of his decision, arguing that it was the right thing to do to remove Saddam Hussein from power. However, he also admits that the war was a "very difficult decision" and that he regrets the loss of life that it caused.

Other interviews in the book include conversations with former US President George W. Bush, former French President Nicolas Sarkozy, former Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi, and former Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak. These interviews offer a unique insight into the minds of some of the most powerful people in the world.

The book also includes interviews with a number of celebrities, including actors Tom Hanks, Angelina Jolie, and Brad Pitt. These interviews offer a glimpse into the lives of some of the most famous people in the world and reveal their thoughts on everything from politics to religion to their own careers.

Finally, the book includes interviews with a number of criminals, including serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer and drug lord Pablo Escobar. These interviews offer a chilling insight into the minds of some of the most evil people in history.

Brutally Honest is a fascinating and unforgettable collection of interviews that offers a unique glimpse into the minds of some of the most fascinating and controversial figures of our time. It is a must-read for anyone interested in politics, current events, or human nature.
