Prepare to be amazed as we venture into the extraordinary world of Ripley's Believe It or Not! with Bruce Cook, the renowned historian and author who has dedicated his life to uncovering the most bizarre and captivating stories from Ripley's vast archives.

From the moment you step into a Ripley's Believe It or Not! museum, you'll be transported to a realm where the ordinary gives way to the extraordinary. With over 100 museums in 80 countries, Ripley's has amassed an unparalleled collection of oddities, artifacts, and stories that will challenge your perceptions and ignite your imagination.

But behind every artifact and every tale lies a rich history, and that's where Bruce Cook comes in. As Ripley Entertainment's official historian, Cook has spent decades delving into the archives, unearthing the stories behind the exhibits and bringing them to life for the world to enjoy.

The Origins of Ripley's

The story of Ripley's begins with Robert Ripley, an American cartoonist and explorer who had an insatiable curiosity for the strange and unusual. In 1918, Ripley began publishing a syndicated newspaper panel called "Believe It or Not!," featuring bizarre facts and oddities from around the world.

Ripley's panels quickly gained popularity, and in 1933, he opened his first Ripley's Believe It or Not! museum in Chicago. The museum was an instant success, and Ripley continued to expand his collection of oddities and open new museums throughout his lifetime.

Bruce Cook's Ripley Readers Series
