Driven by an indomitable spirit and a love for the untamed, chef and adventurer Soloman Drysdale set out to traverse a million square miles of the Outback, armed with nothing more than a single pan.

Over the course of a year, Drysdale ventured into remote and unforgiving terrains, encountering the challenges and beauty of the Outback firsthand.

His journey took him from the rugged Pilbara to the endless red sands of the Simpson Desert, where he encountered kangaroos, emus, and ancient Aboriginal rock art.

With each step, Drysdale not only tested the limits of his endurance but also pushed the boundaries of culinary creativity.
